DAUGHTER OF COOPERS GROVE PASTOR MARRIED

One of the most beautiful weddings of the season was held on Thanksgiving Day in the St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church, Coopers Grove, when Miss Wilma Meyer, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. F. Meyer, became the bride of Reinhart Meyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Meyer of Tinley Park.

The bride was given in marriage by her father who also performed the ceremony. Mr. A. Bauer of Chicago Heights sang "O Perfect Love" and "Jesus, Still lead on". Mr. W. Gotsch of Aurora was the organist.

The bride wore ivory slipper satin with a long train and a veil trimmed with bridal lace. The veil and blusher fell from a head piece of pearls shaped as leaves. Her shower bouquet was made of chrysanthemums and pompons.

The maid of honor, Miss Betty Meyer, sister of the bride was dressed in gold corded taffeta made in colonial style with hat trimmed in brown plumes and brown accessories.

Bridesmaids, Misses Adele Cohrs, Miss Vera Daniels, Miss Grace Greve and Miss Betty Scriven wore dresses alike in new penny corded taffeta, colonial style with matching hats, and brown accessories. All girls carried colonial bouquets of small mums and pompons.

The flower girl, Miss Bonnie Meyer, age 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Meyer, wore a gold dress exactly like the maid of honor with matching hat and colonial bouquet.

Mr. Meyer's attendants were: Mr. Fred Meyer, cousin, as best man; Mr. Marvin Meyer, brother of the bride, Mr. Alfred Meyer, brother of groom, Mr. Harold Stelter, Mr. Ervin Batterman, Mr. John Anagnost and Mr. Walter Meyer. The men wore full dress suits with white ties and a boutonniere of white carnations. The grooms boutonniere was made of a carnation and same flowers as brides bouquet.

Master Norman Bauer, age 4, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Bauer of Chicago was Miss Bonnie Meyer's partner, and was dressed exactly as the other men and had a carnation in his lapel. He wore a black silk hat coming into the church and going out again.

The young couple staid in the church hall to receive congratulations and best wishes from their many friends and relatives.

The wedding dinner was served in St. John's Lutheran school where 150 guests attended. A short program was enjoyed. Rev. H. M. Bauer of Chicago served as master of ceremonies. After the dinner the guests returned to the bride's home for the rest of the evening. Later lunch was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Meyer received many beautiful gifts. Mr. Meyer is employed in Vogt's department store in Tinley Park. The bride is employed at Brunswick Balke Collender Co., in Chicago. They will make their home in Tinley Park.

Guests at the wedding were from Chicago, Aurora, Milford, Watseka, Buckiey, Thornton, Flossmoor, Blue Island, Chicago Heights, Homewood and Tinley Park.

The church was decorated in yellow and white chrysanthemums, ferns and palms. A runner was laid before the wedding party entered the church on which was scattered colored fall leaves. White satin bows decorated the pews of the church.

Roots Cause Flooded Basement

Fibrous roots closed up a length of drain tile of the Scheiblich residence on Front street, Mokena occupied by the Needham family.

The clogged tile caused the cellar to flood, about two feet of water covering the floor and threatened to put out the fire in the furnace. On Thursday noon a party from Aurora who makes a specialty of cleaning out drains came and used an electric cutter operated from a long cable. The fine roots were cut loose and soon were washed out and in a very short time the water was drained out of the basement.

Motor Club To Check On 159th St.

November 25, 1940
Mr. William Semmler, Editor
The News-Bulletin
Mokena, Illinois
Dear Mr. Semmler:

We shall be glad to have one of our men check at once the three intersections mentioned in your letter. As your letter indicates, you understand quite clearly the problem involved—the need for compromising between the through traffic's interest in uninterrupted speed and a humanitarian interest in safety. The state department has definite restrictions on the use of traffic signals and four-way stop signs—a use which is largely predicated upon traffic volume, in both the main highway and the intersecting road.

We will do the best we can to secure the most positive protection for these three points.

We are glad to have you write us.

Sincerely yours,

CHICAGO MOTOR CLUB

Palos Park Girl A Thanksgiving Bride

The Community Church in Palos Park was the scene of a pretty wedding Thanksgiving day evening when Miss Ruby Stockdale, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Stockdale of Palos and Owen Creer, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Creer of Orland Park were united in marriage.

The service took place at seven o'clock, with Rev. Chas. Rawson of the Brookline Presbyterian church of Chicago officiating, the singing ceremony being used. The bride was given in marriage by her father.

The bride was prettily gowned in white satin, and wore a veil. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

Icy Highway Causes Accident

Icy roads caused an accident at 159th and Oak Park ave., north of Tinley Park Tuesday night. The driver of a new auto in transit was just pulling away from the Fahrenheit filling station when a car driven by Golden Lang residing near Mokena skidded and crashed into him. In the impact the driver suffered a badly cut throat and bit his tongue quite badly when his head hit the windshield which broke.

Mr. Lang escaped injury. Both cars were badly damaged.

Blizzard Ushers In Winter Season

The first heavy snow, icy roads and cold weather swept this section Tuesday morning. Highways were blocked and many cars were stalled. Snow plows, however, cleared the main highways by afternoon. Cinders were spread at railroad crossings and on hills and curves. Garages did a rushing business.

Thursday morning the thermometer was down to 6 above zero.

Extend Red Cross Roll Call

Because of the snow and bad roads the Red Cross Roll Call in Mokena has been extended for a week. This will allow for those who have not been solicited to be contacted.

PIG ROAST AT ROBINSON'S ON SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7

Robinson's are preparing a nice young pig for their Annual Pig Roast Party which will be held at the tavern on Saturday, December 7. All are invited to attend especially those who have never tasted one of these well roasted, delicately flavored, delicious pork sandwiches.

The intersection of 159th and Kean in Orland Township was the scene of another death when two cars collided about five o'clock on Thanksgiving day afternoon. A car from Wisconsin was going north on Kean at about sixty miles per hour and the driver disregarded the stop sign, crashing into an east bound car on 159th street. In the crash, Mrs. Bernice Prusak, 33, of 12051 Wentworth ave., Chicago, was killed and six other persons were seriously injured. They were removed to the Oak Forest Infirmary hospital by state highway police.

The dead woman was riding with her husband in a 1937 Chevrolet on 159th street. The Wisconsin people were riding in a new 1941 Ford VS. It is reported they had no license plate on the car. Two of the passengers in the Wisconsin car, a man and a woman, were most critically injured.

Both cars were reduced to junk. The Wisconsin car was towed to Tinley Park by English Bros., garage wrecker and the Chevrolet was taken to Orland Park.

Post Office Christmas "Jam"

Post office officials at Tinley Park expect the largest Christmas of all time and are preparing accordingly.

During the Holiday Time the volume of mail increases approximately 200 per cent. It is a physical impossibility to handle this great mass of mail matter efficiently and promptly within a few days. Therefore to assure delivery of their Christmas presents, cards, and letters by Christmas Day, the public should shop and mail early. Do your Christmas shopping early so that you can mail your gifts, greetings, and letters to relatives, friends, and loved ones at least a week or ten days before Christmas, according to the distance.

Extend the warm glow of your Christmas greetings by mailing early. Spread your greetings not only for a day but for the pre-Christmas season as well—the whole Holiday season.

Unsealed greeting cards containing no written message other than a simple greeting such as "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" and your signature or name, may be mailed for One and One-half cents (1½¢) for delivery anywhere but if addressee has moved from address given, this class of mail will not be forwarded, therefore if you are not sure of correct address, mail your greeting card in a closed envelope with 3¢ postage, and it will be forwarded, or returned to you if you give return address thereon.

Points to be remembered in wrapping and mailing Christmas parcels include the following:

All parcels must be securely packed and wrapped. Use strong paper and heavy twine. All articles easily broken or damaged must be plainly marked "Fragile." Perishable articles should be marked "Perishable."

Addresses should be complete with house number and name of street, post office box or rural route number typed or plainly written in ink. A return address should be placed in the upper left-hand corner of every piece of mail.

Tinley Methodist Youth Activities

The cabinets of the Sunday Evening groups met Monday evening at the home of the superintendent of this division, Mrs. Weinreich.

Some of the most important decisions made at this meeting were:

Completing the work in the room that these young people have obligated themselves to decorate and furnish. This room promises to be one more spot of beauty and convenient comfort added to the new church.

A Christmas pageant "The Perfect gift", will be given in the sanctuary on Sunday evening, December 22.

Programs of interest were outlined and planned up to and including January 5th, when everyone will be invited to join in an outstanding service.

Dr. Aubry S. Moore will be guest and speaker. He is a man of much experience, and now serves as Head of Chicago City Missions and Church extension.

It is the aim of this group to use every first Sunday in the month for a public meeting that will be most outstanding in caliber.

MOKENA TO HAVE ELABORATE XMAS DECORATIONS

Now that Thanksgiving is over almost everybody is beginning to think about the observance of Christmas. The streets in the various business sections of large cities and smaller towns are being beautifully decorated. Store windows show wonderful displays of Christmas gifts for young and old. Everything possible is being done to create a joyful Christmas spirit. In recent years this outward show of a yuletide spirit has not been confined to business sections only, but has also taken hold in numerous residential sections of smaller communities as well. In certain towns, neighbors vie with each other in outdoor decorations and exhibitions, and many people come from considerable distances to see and admire their handiwork, which changes an otherwise drab neighborhood into a kind of fairyland at night.

While the most of us in Mokena have been doing our Christmas decorating within the four walls of our homes, would it not be a fine idea to make Mokena this year an outstanding attractive - looking village during the Christmas period. Many things can be done with a little creative imagination and with little expense to make the outside of our homes and also the business places attractive. How nice it would be to have people come from neighboring towns to look at our outdoor decorations and displays and to have the satisfaction of feeling that thru our combined efforts we were instrumental in creating a better Christmas spirit in our own community.

With this in mind the members of the Mokena Garden Club, with the co-operation of the Civic Association and the Village Board, are planning for an outdoor decoration contest between the various business places and also among the individual home owners of Mokena. The business men have already expressed their willingness to enter the contest and to place a small Christmas tree in front of each of their places of business.

The home owners are being especially asked to enter into the spirit of the contest. Two prizes of $10.00 each are to be awarded for the best decorations. One for the Business men and one for the home owners. The decorations will be judged by a committee of disinterested outsiders.

In order to know what homes and what business houses to judge, contestants are asked to give in their names not later than December 16th, to Mrs. Fred Rauch, who is chairman of the Christmas contest committee. Independent of this contest, the Civic Association is also sponsoring a community Christmas tree and party. The date for this party will be published later. The various church groups have also signified their willingness to cooperate with the Garden club.

Plan for 'Federal Union of Democracies' Would Unite English-Speaking Nations

By Frank Parker Stockbridge

(The author of this article has made a study of the "Federal Union" plan and his views on it are presented herewith. His opinions are not necessarily those of this newspaper.)

For a year and a half now people have been hearing talk about a Federal Union of Democracies. Now that the three great dictatorships, Germany, Italy and Japan, have ganged up together for the express purpose of putting all the democracies out of business, including our own, we are hearing more talk about getting together with the other English-speaking nations for the common defense. And now that the Presidential election is over, and folks in public life can talk freely without facing the charge that what they are talking about is a partisan affair, we are going to hear a great deal more about the Federal Union plan.

The people of the United States are already pretty solidly behind the proposal that we must give every possible aid to the British, in their gallant stand to preserve the democratic ideal against the dictatorial gangsters. Why, folk are asking, shouldn't we go even farther and do some ganging up ourselves? Suppose the people of the British Commonwealth of Nations and of the United States of America should agree to pool their interests and their resources and stand together against the aggressor powers, how far could Hitler, Mussolini and the Mikado get with their project of dividing the earth among them?

You'd be surprised at the seriousness with which that plan is being discussed all over the country, by men in high places and serious students of world affairs.

Plan Is 'Simple.'

It's simple, the Federal Union plan; as simple as the Federal Union under which our own 13 original little nations got together 150 years ago. The United States united with one another to be able to do jointly what none of them could do separately. None of them surrendered any control over its internal affairs, but in dealing with other nations they acted as a unit.

Suppose, now, the United States, the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa and Eire all agreed to form a Federal Union. They could do it by mutual agreement, without changing their present forms of government. It would not be an alliance or a league of nations. The trouble with alliances and leagues is that they don't work, while a real union does. It was because he had seen so many alliances and leagues fail that Clarence K. Streit, the American newspaper man whose book "Union Now" planted the Federal Union idea in so many people's minds, pointed out that the only way to save democracy was by a real union of peoples. Peoples, please note—not nations.

In a union of peoples, every citizen would have equal weight with every other citizen. If there were 50 members of the Inter-Continental congress, which would be set up provisionally until a more perfect union was formed, representation on a population basis would give the United States 27 members, the United Kingdom, 11, Canada and Australia 3 each, New Zealand, South Africa and Eire 2 each. The United States would have a clear majority over all the others put together. I point that out to make it clear that Federal Union is not a British scheme but a definitely American project.

Above—Gunners from the British navy are being instructed by American naval gunners in the operation of a secret device that is part of the guns aboard the over-age destroyers recently turned over to Britain in exchange for naval and air bases. Scenes like this might become common if the Federal Union of Democracies, described in the accompanying article, ever became an actuality, for according to Mr. Stockbridge, under this plan, "defense forces, air, sea and land . . . would be pooled."

What Do We Give Up?

All right, then; what do we give up and what do we get if we go in? First, the defense forces, air, sea, and land—except, no doubt, national militia, would be pooled under the Union government. Such a force would make potential enemies think twice.

Every citizen of any of the member states would be a citizen of the Union, as in America today—free to travel, settle, engage in business, work at a trade or develop the resources of any part of the enormous area included in the Union. Broader horizons and wider opportunities for all. Commerce would be free of artificial barriers between member states; the Union could set up barriers for all against non-members.

In the territory controlled by the Federal Union would be the bulk of the world's raw materials; in its factories would be most of the world's productive capacity. Its citizenry would include by far the highest technical skills in the world with the best-equipped research laboratories in which to develop and maintain their supremacy. It would control the strategic ports and seaways of commerce of most of the world. It could and should be the most powerful influence for peace ever created.

How the Federal Union would be governed would be for the convention at which it is formed to decide. The plan proposed would place the executive power in the hands of a premier and cabinet subject to removal by the legislative assembly. A proposal to establish what would be in effect, a world capital somewhere on this side of the Atlantic, perhaps even in the central part of the United States, has been made. There would be no more clash between the government of the United States and the Federal Union than there is now between the government of, say, Kansas, and that of the United States. Each would continue to function in its own sphere as before.

Membership Requirements.

The major requirement for membership in the Federal Union would necessarily be that of democracy. And as Clarence Streit defines democracy, it is a condition or system in which the majority controls but must respect the rights of every minority, however small—even a minority of one. For human rights are not conferred by the state, but are inherent in the individual, and must not be infringed by government.

It is too soon to make even vague predictions as to the prospects of the Federal Union plan. But a large and growing body of influential advocates of the plan is urging that our government call a preliminary convention of delegates from all the eligible nations, perhaps in Independence hall, where the Continental congress met and adopted the Declaration of Independence. The dream of a new declaration—a Declaration of Interdependence may not be too far from realization, once the people of the world recognize it as the surest path to permanent peace and prosperity for all.

It is not something which will be brought about by those who seek to make personal political capital out of arousing international hatreds and racial jealousies. It will be brought about, when it comes, by the peoples themselves, the ordinary folk of the democratic nations, the ones who have to fight wars and pay for them, who have most to gain and least to lose by uniting in a Federal Union.

Little-Known Metal Plays Defense Role

NEW YORK.—Behind the official secrecy that enfolded details of the national defense program a metal called beryllium is daily playing a more and more important role—a role so vital that army officials believe it may help break the "bottle-neck" in the machine tool industry caused by a shortage of skilled workers.

Army ordnance men reveal that beryllium alloys have been successfully tested for use in mass production of parts for the new Garand rifles.

Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, board chairman of Pan American Airways, sponsored research in the metal—at a cost of more than $400,000 in the past seven years—and helped make possible the timely "graduation" of the substance from a laboratory toy to an instrument of commerce and defense.

Whitney saw huge potentialities in beryllium, largely in aviation because of the metal's resistance to fatigue and corrosion, its extraordinary light weight and electrical conductivity. The metal is only two-thirds as heavy as aluminum.

"Until recently," he said, "the great problem of beryllium was its high cost of production. Half a century or so ago the pure metal would have cost about $5,000 a gram. Today it sells in quantities at about $15 a pound."

Scientific Achievement.

"That is a scientific achievement which some day I believe will make possible beryllium's volume use in the hulls of seaplanes and ships, because it is non-corrosive."

A pinch of beryllium added to copper, aluminum, magnesium and other metals increases the fluidity of the mixture when it is melted so that the alloy fills every tiny crevice in a casting mold. Steel and other materials used for manufacture of gun parts must be subjected to long processes of forging, machining and finishing with cutting tools before they finally arrive in a rifle. This work needs skilled machine tool artisans.

As a result of these tests, the war department asked immediately for sample castings.

Beryllium alloys have the highest tensile strength known. Beryllium-nickel (2 per cent beryllium and 98 per cent nickel), for instance, has a tensile strength of 260,000 pounds to the square inch, but structural steel only 60,000 and stainless steel 90,000.

A beryllium-copper spring can be flexed 20,000,000,000 times before it will break, compared with 2 or 3 million times for one which is constructed out of steel.

Keep Liver Healthy and Enjoy Life

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

YOU have heard the expression that "life depends upon the liver," but an improvement on this expression might be "the enjoyment of life depends upon the liver." A healthy, active liver enables us to face our responsibilities and troubles with our best selves, whereas a sluggish liver, with slow moving bile, makes little trouble or responsibilities loom very large in our minds.

Some idea of the work done by the bile salts in the body is outlined by Drs. A. C. Ivy and A. L. Berman, Chicago, in Minnesota Medicine, who reminds us that the bile salts promote the formation of bile, keep fatty acids in solution, aid in the digestion of fats and their absorption into the blood, enable the blood to absorb iron and calcium (two very necessary minerals) more readily, have a laxative action, and take an important part in destroying poisons in the intestine.

As mentioned before, this action of the bile in causing the large intestine to move its wastes along and prevent constipation, is one of the big factors in enabling us to face our daily work and responsibilities with the courage man naturally possesses. The fact also that the bile can destroy the poisons or harmful wastes that would poison the blood stream means much in maintaining our everyday courage.

How to Keep Liver Healthy.

The bile can be manufactured by the liver and flow freely from liver only if the liver is kept healthy.

How can the liver be kept healthy? I have spoken a number of times of the two ways you can keep your liver working properly; first by not eating large meals, especially of fats, and second, by bending, twisting and breathing exercises which "squeeze" the liver, stimulate the circulation and speed up the flow of bile from the liver and gall bladder.

Where there is stasis or sluggishness of the gall bladder, Drs. Ivy and Berman suggest the use of bile salts to increase the flow of bile.

Where there is acute gall bladder disease, the use of bile salts or other remedies should be prescribed only by a physician.

Ulcerative Colitis Yields to Oil Enemas

WHAT is called ulcerative colitis, where the lining of the colon is greatly inflamed and ulceration present, the symptoms may be so severe that surgery is necessary to obtain relief. For years, mild anti-septic enemas have been used once or twice a day, and sometimes oil enemas, which were left in the colon overnight. What may prove of much help in severe cases is enemas of cod liver oil.

Dr. H. Gainsborough in the Lancet, London, reports his results of using cod liver oil enemas in six cases of ulcerative colitis.

Preliminary Treatment.

Before using the cod liver oil enemas, patients were given complete rest in bed and starch and opium enemas to reduce the diarrhoea and irritability of the colon. These starch and opium enemas kept the colon so quiet that the patients were able to hold the cod liver oil enemas in the colon all night. This gave the cod liver oil all these hours to help heal the ulcers and raw surfaces. At the beginning of the treatment the patient was able to hold the cod liver oil enemas only a short time and they were given during the day. Later they were given at bed time and held by the patient till morning. The beginning dose was two ounces at a time, gradually increasing up to eight ounces.

Three of the six patients whose illness had lasted 3, 6 and 15 months, respectively, were cured and have remained cured for the last two years. One patient suffering for 12 years remained well 15 months, but then relapsed; another suffering six years relapsed after 15 months, but was cured after further use of the cod liver oil enemas. The sixth patient was not helped.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Republicans in Washington ask who will be leader of their party . . . Many criticisms muzzled by the elections to be aired now.

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—National political observers are asking: Who is going to be the leader of the Republican party?

Wendell Willkie is going to be a big figure, of course, for some years to come, but while he will be the titular leader, the rank and file of the party will really be searching for somebody new.

Republicans do not go in for re-nominating men who have been defeated. Charles E. Hughes was not renominated in 1920. He was scarcely mentioned. Yet he had made a very strong race in 1916, and was far and away bigger in every respect than the man the 1920 convention nominated.

There is another point about Willkie. He has announced that he will resume the practice of law. The probability here is that he will go politically—the way of John W. Davis. Willkie has enjoyed a substantial income now for 10 years. It does not take any man's family long to grow up to a big income. It is very difficult for a family's financial "necessities" to be reduced.

This will make it very likely, to put it mildly, that Willkie will have to seek big fees. That is what John W. Davis did, and if Willkie does seek big fees he will be even more branded as connected with the "big interests" than he was in the campaign just ended.

HOOPER UNLIKELY CONTENDER

Herbert Hoover, the only living ex-President, always aspires to the leadership of the party, but it would be more than surprising if he can attain it. Too many of the top sergeants of the party regard him as political poison. Those who thought Hoover effective on the stump in the Willkie campaign had great difficulty persuading local politicians to arrange meetings for him. The view of the local leaders was that Hoover would do the cause more harm than good.

It is not a question of intellectual reasoning. It is not a question of whether Hoover is right or wrong in his defense of his own administration. The facts are never important in politics. It is what people think that is important, and too many people just naturally think Hoover is bad medicine.

Alfred M. Landon has never been important since his defeat in 1936, if one excepts the brief interlude at the Philadelphia convention, when he controlled the Kansas delegation.

Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota might have become the logical leader if he had made a better showing in his own state this time.

Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg's triumph was spectacular in Michigan, but here again the Republicans seem to regard as shopworn any man who has tried and failed for the big nomination a few times.

CAMPAIGN SILENCE ENDED

Now that the election returns have passed into history, we will hear a lot of things and see some fireworks on which there has been a time fuse until the count of the ballots had been concluded.

One of these is a tremendous Democratic protest against the shipping of machine tools to Soviet Russia. Many Democrats in the house and senate would have broken out about this before now had it not been for the fear that what they said might have an effect on the presidential campaign.

William S. Knudsen's pointed remarks that the production of aircraft in this country encountered a bottleneck because of the scarcity of machine tools made a deep impression on many senators and representatives. Then when they found that part of our machine tools were being released to the Communists, thus slowing down future production of airplanes in this country both for our own national defense and for Britain, some of them went straight through the ceiling.

During the campaign, of course, senators and representatives who have talked at all have talked with the intention of helping the candidates they wanted to win. Plenty of the Democrats disagreed profoundly with President Roosevelt. Plenty of the Republicans disagreed just as profoundly with Wendell Willkie.

The lid is off, now, and we are going to hear plenty. Lots of the statesmen are ready to take their hair down and call spades something else besides agricultural implements.

And, outside of campaigns, most senators like to say sensational things—it gets them publicity. And the boys do like to see their names and pictures in the papers.

Isn't This Why You Are Constipated?

What do you eat for breakfast? Coffee, toast, maybe some eggs? What do you eat for lunch and dinner? White bread, meat, potatoes? It's little wonder you're constipated. You probably don't eat enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean the amount you eat. It's a kind of food that forms a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a movement. If this is your trouble, may we suggest a crunchy toasted cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran—for breakfast. All-Bran is a natural food, not a medicine—but it's particularly rich in "bulk." Being so, it can help you not only to get regular but to keep regular. Eat All-Bran regularly, and drink plenty of water. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. If your condition is chronic, it is wise to consult a physician.

Alien Fingerprinting Increases Work for FBI

WASHINGTON.—Fingerprint records of the some 3,000,000 aliens now being registered in the United States are adding materially to the work of the fingerprinting division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

In addition to this increase, the division's regular work has increased steadily in recent months. At present the division has on file fingerprints of 13 1/2 million persons. When the first returns of the alien registration started coming in, the division handled 16,500 sets of fingerprints to set a record for "busy days."

Fingerprints are being sent to the division from civic organizations whose members have carried out fingerprinting as a measure of personal security.

Live-Stock Show Attracts

Entries From 35 States

CHICAGO.—Stockmen and farmers from 35 states and Canada have listed exhibits of live stock and crops for the 1940 International Live Stock exposition, the country's largest agricultural show.

The exposition is being held in the International Amphitheatre at the Chicago Stock Yards November 30 to December 7. Cash premiums totaling $100,000, will be awarded.

There are more than 2,000,000 such sets in the files. In addition, all government agencies are fingerprinting job applicants.

In three months, the division has received 77,678 sets from the war department, 53,917 from the Civilian Conservation Corps, 50,832 from civil service, 32,000 from the navy, 3,728 from the marine corps, 910 from the coast guard and 712 from the maritime commission.

All these are filed under an intricate mathematical system based on the shape of the markings on the finger tips. They are divided so only a few score of each type are filed together. The fingerprint expert thus is able to effect an identification of any set of prints in about three minutes.

In addition to the large active files, the division has inactive files for persons past 60. After a person has reached 90, his prints are transferred to the dead files, unless the division has been questioned on the individual.

Fingerprint files also are cross-referenced to a card system, so all information may be obtained easily by clerks. Some individuals have as many as 160 cards referring to different crimes. About 26,000 cards and fingerprints are marked with red tabs to indicate a fugitive from justice.

THE STORY

When Virgie Morgan, widow, and owner of the Morgan paper mill in the Carolina mountain district, turns down a marriage proposal from Wallace Withers, he leaves her house in a rage. Virgie turns him down because she believes he is more interested in possession of her mill than in obtaining a wife. After he has gone, Branford Wills, a young stranger, who has been lost on the mountain-side for three days, finds his way to the Morgan home. Taken in, he is fed and warmed and allowed to remain overnight.

"Not even when they're on the opposite side of the feud?" Wills asked, whimsically.

"Well, I don't dignify any argument I get into with the title of feud," said Virgie. "Though the Government is hen-fussy—sticking its bill into every little mess that the rain would cover up charitably in a couple of days! But I'm like this—if I've got a spoonful of meal, I'll share it. You get some rest tonight. It's a wonder you aren't half dead. You must be as tough as a balsam knot. Tomorrow I'll put chains on a car and send you wherever you want to go."

"You're very generous." He stood up, wavering a little and grinning sadly at his weakness. She saw his well-knit, lean young body, the unconscious grace of youth, with silken muscles and leaping blood—youth that knows exactly where it is going and has not learned yet the grudging welcome of the world. "I was fortunate," he went on, "in having tumbled on your door-step."

"You can pay me back some time. I'm merely circulating some propaganda to the effect that there are one or two decent pulp people in the world. You can carry that word back to Washington."

"I'll do it gladly. I'll add some personal indorsements. In fact, I think I'll launch a campaign."

He stopped. A tiny horn blared. The dogs set up an excited yelping outside and a car door smacked shut. Then the front door crashed open, letting in a blast of wind, a swirl of icy rain, and a girl in a green, rubber coat and beret.

A slim, small girl, with reddish-chestnut hair tumbled damply on her collar, with a small, tanned face and very big brown eyes.

"Oh—" she stopped, surprised, seeing him.

"Shut the door," directed Virgie calmly. "This is my daughter, Marian Morgan. This is Mr. Branford Wills—from Washington. He's staying with us tonight. He's been lost."

"Oh—I—" Wills was confused. A slow, unhappy red crept over his haggard face.

"We've met before," announced Marian, coolly.

"Good gracious," her mother exclaimed.

"He"—Marian's pansy-warm eyes had turned flat and unfriendly, her small red mouth hardened—"he doesn't like pulp people!"

"So I've heard," said Virgie, unperturbed, thinking how like her father Marian was. Shrewd and small and implacable, like David Morgan, hanging in his gold frame above the mantel fire. "But we've declared a truce on that. It's too darned cold tonight to keep up any kind of a fight."

But Marian was scarcely listening. She was looking at Branford Wills with hostile eyes.

"So you got lost?"

"So it appears. Your mother was charitable enough to take me in and feed me."

"Nothing much happens to mother. He thinks"—Marian turned to her mother, her voice crackling a little—"that all pulp people should be burned at the stake—slowly—he told me so. At the dance the other night."

"That's unfair," declared young Mr. Wills. "I didn't know you. I was spouting to hear my own voice. I apologize."

"Don't bother. It doesn't matter to me in the least." Marian pulled off the damp beret, shook rain from it. "The road is dreadful. Mother—you'll need chains in the morning. I'll go up, I think. Did Lottie make a fire in my room?"

"Andrew did."

"Please," interposed young Mr. Wills, anxiously, "don't go away without letting me explain—I'll eat any amount of crow—I'll even pick the bones if you wish—"

Marian's head went up. She pushed back her damp, fruit-tinted hair with a palm, regarded him aloofly.

"I see no reason to discuss it, thank you. This is mother's house. She is free to entertain whomever she likes in it. Good night."

She walked past them, her head held rigidly. Virgie Morgan's mouth drew in at one corner.

"Don't worry about her, son," she advised. "She'll be all over it in the morning. She's a loyal little trick—and all the Morgans are fighters. What did you say to her at that dance?"

He shook his head ruefully. "I can't even remember!" he admitted.

The mill of the Morgan Pulp Company had never been an imposing structure.

David Morgan had built it early in the century, and David Morgan had inherited from a Highland root of his family a preponderant caution, a carefulness that erected slowly, with due regard for foundations and a keen eye out for credit, but no particular anxiety as to appearances.

No artist had ever etched the steaming ugliness of the plant, dome and stack, snatching cable and roaring chute. There was no chilled, modern music of steel and glass, no men in white, no ranked battery of shining stacks and retorts. But there was good pulp. Through the defeating lag of the depression, since David's death, Virgie's market had held. When a finishing mill got an order for extra quality paper they wired for Morgan pulp to mill it from. There had been half-time work, half-week lay-offs, but always the pay-roll ready on the fifth and the twentieth, whether Virgie's rusty old leather handbag had a nickel of spending money in it or not.

Tom Pruitt knew how it had run on. And Virgie Morgan knew.

Tom Pruitt had been David Morgan's friend. Once Tom Pruitt's timber land had covered three counties. Little rivers that he owned had shuttled with trout; coves and ridges to which he held title had sheltered pronged buck and snuffling bear, and the frantic industry of beavers slowed mountain creeks that began and ended on Tom's domain.

Then had come the incredible hysteria of '25.

Men, their blood carbonated by a virus bred of the madneses of Florida, came prowling into the mountains, a wild, acquisitive light in their eyes. They bought land, optioned it, leased and contracted for it.

Men came—gray men with the air of affairs, who spoke slowly and little. Men to inspire confidence. They wanted to buy Tom Pruitt's land. Tom thought things out slowly. He was a meditative, heavy, slow-moving man. His great body was slow, but terrible with strength.

Tom sold his land finally. There was considerable pressure before they got him up to the point, two concerns bidding for it, and when he at last gave in, there was a tremendous down payment made—more money than Tom Pruitt had ever seen in his life. Too much money. Not a check—Tom was suspicious of checks—but cash in green sheafs, with heavy paper bands around it. Fifty thousand dollars. And more in five, seven, and ten years, according to the contract.

Tom was dazed. The sum total of his former possession diminished in his mind, became subordinate to the cash. He forgot the great stand of virgin poplar up the Hazel Fork, forgot the mellow bottom land with orchards on it, where his mother's turkeys had fed. All he thought about was this money. Enough money to last as long as he lived, if he spent it. But he would not spend it. He would hold onto it. It numbed and thrilled and frightened him.

He took it to David Morgan, his friend. "You keep it for me," he begged. "Put it some place."

"I'll put it in the bank for you," David, the cautious, said.

But Tom Pruitt had little faith in banks. They got robbed every now and then. You read in the paper where a bank had busted and some fellow gone off to South America with all the money belonging to other people.

"No, you keep it, Dave," Tom begged. "Then if I want it I can get it back again. If a banker gets it he'll lend it to some of these real-estate fellers over to Asheville, and then when the concern goes bust my money will be sunk in one of them subdivisions with fancy gates and red-white-and-blue flags stuck in the ground. And I don't want none of them."

Morgan argued. "I can't put fifty thousand dollars in this old safe, Tom."

"You put it somewhere, Dave. Put it in something so I'll know you've got it. Anywhere's is all right—just so I know you got it."

"I can sell you a share of the mill," Morgan said abruptly. "Would you want that? I can use your money to buy that spruce up Cheota and to put in a new drier. And you'll own part of the mill."

Old and taciturn as he was, Tom Pruitt trembled, with sudden exaltation. To own even a fragment of a thing as splendid to his eyes as the Morgan mill—to touch a brick of it or a pet-cock from an acid tank and think, "Mine!" He wanted nothing more from life.

He surrendered the sheaf of lush green bills to David Morgan.

Tom was glad of his heartening part of Morgan's work. The fifth and the seventh year saw the payments on his land defaulted. The title was almost inextricably tangled in a snarl of holding companies, stock companies, second and third mortgages, judgments, and suits.

"Foreclose," David Morgan told Tom, just before David lay down at night to wake in the morning with a crooked, drooping mouth, a helpless arm and leg, and a fogged brain that would never clear again.

But Tom, lost in the frantic trouble of helping Virgie to keep the mill running while David lay helpless in the white house on the mountain, had no time to think of himself or his problems.

Stocks had crashed, orders were few, men were frightened, restive, alert for bad news from any quarter. Tom held his peace and kept pulp wood coming into the mill. At night he rode the rusty old truck up the mountain road to Morgan's house, where he shaved helpless David, cut his toe-nails, trimmed the white dry locks of hair, rubbed his weary, wasting back.

In the meantime Tom's land on Little Fork and Hazel Fork became one of a hundred tracts lost in a fog of indefinite involvement; owned and not owned.

Tom waited, worried, dubious, and unhappy. Then David Morgan died. And after that there was no chance of selling Morgan pulp stock enough to finance a suit to foreclose and clear title, even if Tom had known how to begin it.

Tom locked the old safe on his beautiful yellow papers, with the gilt seals upon them, pulled his belt tighter, hunched his shoulders, and set to work to help Virgie Morgan save the mill.

It was still partly his and the stacks were still scrawling their bleared autograph of hopefulness upon the Carolina sky.

Afterwards Virgie Morgan looked back on those three years, trying to separate phases, distinguish definite epochs of despair, as a person who has emerged alive from an inundation or a frightful wreck tries to recall incidents of that catastrophe, decide what came first and what after. But only one thing stood out clear—Tom Pruitt's unvarying loyalty, his quiet and unfailing support.

There was ice on every branch and dead leaf, every blade of grass and jointed weed, when Tom came through the gate of the mill in that raw November dawn. The wind was still frigid with little promise of a thaw. Smoke was snatched from the stack, torn to pieces, strung along the ground in rags. The steel padlock, with which for twenty years the plank door of the office building had been locked, was like something dipped in melted glass. Tom beat it against the door frame, twisted the key, pushed the door inward on a musty caddy smelling of mildewed paper and raw chemicals.

The stove was still faintly warm and Tom raked out the ashes into a bucket and kindled a new fire, fanning it encouragingly with his hat.

Then with two buckets he plodded toward the engine room, head down, big hat flapping. He had carefully drained both trucks at sunset last night; hot water would make them start quicker. He took care of all the equipment, he liked to do it. No alcohol in radiators. That made the cars heat on the mountain grades. And today things had to be entirely right, because Virgie Morgan was going up to look over her reforestation project.

Tom's old watch, hitched to a braided strip of snakeskin, showed seven o'clock when he went back to the office. Steam was hissing from the boiler-room cocks, two oilers were getting their equipment out of the tool shed. In thirty minutes the whistle would bellow. In twenty-five minutes Virgie's old coupe should enter the mill gate. Tom took an old rag and dabbed dust from Virgie's desk. There was a votive air about what he did, but this devotion was not for Virgie Morgan, the woman. To Tom, Virgie was part of David, part of the mill. She was the mill.

Then the telephone rang. Tom shouted into it.

"Hello, Tom." It was Virgie's voice. "I won't be going up to the hill with the boys today. Send them out as soon as they are ready."

"Hey!" Tom whooped his arguments, always dubious of the efficiency of the instrument. "Hey—this ice ain't going to last. It'll be gone by nine o'clock. I'll put chains on. You needn't worry."

"I'm not worried, Tom." Virgie's voice came evenly. "Not about anything down there. Ice wouldn't scare me. The trouble's up here, at the house. Something's come up. I can't leave right away."

Tom hung up, grunting, went out to drain the radiator of the second truck.

CHAPTER II

Meanwhile in her kitchen Virgie Morgan held a hot-water bottle over the sink, filled it gingerly, ducking her head as the kettle steamed.

Lottie spooned coffee into a percolator. Her brassy waves were cushioned in a heavy net.

"Think it's pneumonia?" she asked, taking the kettle from her mistress's hand.

"A chill doesn't have to be pneumonia," Virgie said, "but his voice sounds funny and I heard him coughing a lot in the night. That bed was damp probably. Nobody has slept up there in a time. He should have had a fire—worn out the way he was."

"If this house just had a furnace in it—"

"Now, don't go harping on that, Lottie Wilson," Virgie snapped. "Carry up some coal before the doctor comes."

Lottie picked up the coal bucket, stepped into the back hall to remove her hairnet and dab some grayish-lavender powder on her nose. The young man coughing in the bed upstairs had romantic dark eyes and a mouth cut wide for laughter.

But all these devoted pains were wasted after all. Branford Wills was asleep. Red-hot coins of color burned in his cheeks, his hair was disordered and dry looking, his hands twitched, thrusting out of the blue sleeves of a pair of David Morgan's old pajamas.

"He's sure enough got something," Lottie decided, as she laid coal softly on the fire.

Virgie came up presently, tucked the hot-water bottle under the young stranger's feet, looked at him with troubled eyes.

"He's sick, all right," she said. "And I feel responsible. Putting him in this cold tomb of a room—after two nights out on that mountain."

"Well, you took him in," Lottie comforted her in a whisper. "A lot of people would have set the dog on a trampy looking thing like him."

"I can let his people know—and we can take good care of him, anyway," Virgie said.

Something appealing about this dark young head on the pillow. She had wanted three sons of her own—three boys, tall, dark, and audacious. And Heaven had given her only Marian who was small and slim and peppery—but audacious enough, goodness knew!

Wills stirred as the hot bottle warmed him, lifted his head, looked startled.

"Oh, sorry—I'm getting up right away." He licked his dry lips. "Someone should have called me—"

"You're not getting up just yet," Virgie interposed. "You've got a temperature."

"That's odd." He groped confusedly with his long, facile hands. "I'm never sick. I'll be all right in an hour or two. I was pretty tired—and wet, too."

"Lie down," ordered Virgie, tersely, "and don't talk too much. I'll let your outfit know where you are. But for the present you stay here."

"Please, Mrs. Morgan—I can't be a nuisance to you—" He broke off with a racking cough and pain snatched at him. He looked perplexed and in anguish. He wiped his lips with a corner of the sheet.

"I guess—I am sick!" he muttered, lying back again.

Virgie shifted the counterpane, straightened the shades, poked the fire, went downstairs again. In the breakfast-room Marian was sugaring her fruit. Her hair was brushed flat, the sleeves of her orange pajamas flapped, she looked reproachful.

"Lottie says that hobo is sick," she said. "Have we got him on our hands?"

Virgie sat down, poured her coffee, fingered the toast, raised her voice. "Lottie! I can't eat this cold stuff. Make some hot. Yes, he's sick—it looks like pneumonia. And he's no hobo. I've telephoned for the doctor and you'll have to stay here till he comes. I've got to get down to the mill."

"But I don't know a thing about pneumonia!"

"You aren't expected to know. That's what we have the doctor for. You see that Lottie keeps the fire up. I'll send Ada Clark out if I can get hold of her."

"Oh, my heavens. Mother! She snuffles and her nose is always red, and she thinks that she's going to be kidnapped or something every time she sticks her silly head outside."

"Well, you don't have to look at her. She can take care of this boy till he's well enough to be moved somewhere—home, if he has any home."

"I wouldn't call him a boy. He's over twenty-five, if he's a minute!"

"Well, I'm over fifty and that entitles me to call most any man a boy!"

Virgie went out through the kitchen, collecting a hot kettle on the way. Every year winter came to the mountains with a wretched, freezing storm like this. Her little car would be hard to start.

She drove slowly down the icy road, gripping the steering-wheel, hating the treacherous going. Her hat felt insecure on her head. Her gray hair was thick and strong and these cocky little hats had no crowns anyway.

AN EXACTING DISCIPLESHIP

LESSON TEXT—Luke 9:49-62.
GOLDEN TEXT—No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.—Luke 9:62.

Weak-kneed, watered-out, and "sickly" religious philosophies and activities have no right to call themselves Christian. Following Christ is not just a sweet sentimental impulse expressed in smooth words and formal religious exercises. It is a vital, virile, sacrificial faith which leads the true follower of Christ to be willing not only to die for Him, but also to live for Him in the face of opposition, hatred, yes, "through peril, toil and pain."

Let us put away these insipid imitations of Christianity which so often masquerade under its name and face our time with a call to discipleship which demands every fine, noble, manly and womanly quality. The lesson for today reveals that following Jesus (and please remember you are not ready to live for Him until you have been born again) calls for

I. Co-operation (vv. 49, 50).

The placing of the little child in their midst (vv. 46-48) and Jesus' words concerning true greatness revealed to John that he had been wrong in condemning the one who was working for Christ but who was not of their party. The true disciple recognizes that the man who truly loves and serves Christ is to be accepted in His name. We may not like his appearance, or his language, or his methods, or his friends, but we ought to love him and co-operate with him. Let us begin to practice that as well as to say we believe it.

II. Humility (vv. 51-53).

Gross discourtesy, evidently inspired by national hatred (the Jews and Samaritans had no dealings with each other), was shown toward the Lord Himself. His reaction gives us an example of humility, for He said not a word against them. The true follower of Jesus should expect such treatment from a hostile, devil-inspired world and emulate his master by showing love and

III. Patience (vv. 54-56).

The disciples wanted to show their power and authority by bringing the fires of destruction upon the enemies of Christ. That spirit has persisted in the church, the desire to call the fires of heaven (and possibly of hell) to destroy those who hinder or oppose us. Such is not the spirit of our God and His Christ, for He is "long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

IV. Sacrifice (vv. 57, 58).

The writer dislikes to use the word "sacrifice" in connection with our life and service for Christ, for in reality we sacrifice nothing which is not more than replaced (read Matt. 19:29). But at the same time it is true that God does call upon us as Christians to hold nothing dearer than our devotion to Him.

Following Christ is more than singing glibly or carelessly, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord." The one who starts out with Him is to count the cost (Luke 14:28-33). He must expect the same treatment as Christ (II Tim. 3:12) and be willing to take it gladly (John 15:20; I Pet. 2:21). We ought to make this plain to professed believers. Tell young people the truth and you will see that they are ready to respond to it. They are willing to give themselves sacrificially for causes of this earth—why not for Christ?

V. Devotion (vv. 59-62).

It has been said that Christ is either Lord of all or He is not Lord at all. Even the demands which love may present on behalf of our aged father must not be permitted to stand between the Lord and His disciple.

Christianity is considerate and courteous, and our Lord is not here suggesting any neglect of the duties or amenities of life. The point is rather that the Lord must have first place whatever else may call for second thought.

The blight on the life and service of most Christians is that almost anything and everything else is allowed to take first place and the Lord must be satisfied with second or third place. Sometimes one wonders if He is given any real place at all in some lives.

No one who puts his hand to the plough in God's Kingdom and then wants to defer following through until a more convenient season, or who wants to go back to "bid farewell" to someone who for the moment is more important than the Lord, is fit for His service. The way of joy and usefulness is the way of full and unconditional yielding to Him.

Draft Creates Demand For More Wool

Increased slaughter under federal inspection this month, compared with a year earlier, has not weakened the livestock price structure. The cattle and sheep kills will register slight gains compared with last November while hogs are 15 per cent in excess of that time. On the other hand, average killer steer quotations are up $2.35 per cwt; hogs, 45c, with lambs showing a slight gain.

High-dressing steers will be out of the ay by the end of the stock show, December 7, after which a new crop will occupy buyer's attention. Short feds at present are meeting with uneven demand. Warned up heifers have been bad actors of late, but anything in the heifer line that is comparatively long fed is holding up to the season's best levels.

In effort to cut down record stocks of lard, the government plans to purchase a large quantity of that product and has invited offers from packers. Delivery of the lard is to be made during the period beginning December 20 and ending March 22, 1941. Exports of pork and lard continue negligible.

Wool demand is the main support under lamb prices. The wool market, which was inclined to recede a little was pepped up some last week by the government's announcement that approximately 13,265,000 additional yards will be required for military purposes for the balance of the fiscal year. Western operations have been negligible.

Draft Board
Members Serve
Without Pay

Paul G. Armstrong, state director of Selective Service urges the public generally, to assist and cooperate in every way possible with the work of the various Selective Service boards.

"Members of the local and advisory boards, the Appeal agents, the examining physicians and members of the medical advisory and appeal boards," he said, "are not only working, and working hard, without pay but they are sacrificing much of their personal and business time to discharge a patriotic duty. They shouldered an extremely difficult task without hesitation and in a fine spirit of American loyalty. Their untiring services have placed Illinois in the forefront in the administration of the Selective Service law."

Mr. Armstrong pointed out that before any board member or other appointed official of Selective Service may accept the position he must sign a waiver of pay. The waivers in every case have been obtained and are on file at state headquarters.

COOPERATIVE EXTENSION
WORK IN AGRICULTURE
AND HOME ECONOMICS

Would you like to have unusual toys under the Christmas tree this year for all of the younger members of your family? If so, don't fail to see the exhibit of homemade toys which the Women's Extension clubs are showing at the Farm Bureau office this week. The exhibit will be on display from November 25 to December 3 and the entire family is invited to come in sometime during the week and see the exhibit. Pass this news on to your friends as they are welcome too.

The Extension Service has a bulletin showing exactly how all of these toys may be made, and one of these may be secured from the office secretary free.

WRESTLINGMATCHES AT BLUE ISLAND

The internationally famous Angel has been secured by Matchmaker "Stubby" Dahn to headline the next wrestling show at Eagles Hall, Grove and Artesian St., Blue Island, Friday night, November 29.

The potent Neanderthal throwback will face Pete Baltran, Lithuanian strong man who is enjoying a successful invasion of Chicago rings, in a bout slated over a 60 minute rout.

To make the show another "three star" exhibition, Promotor Fred Kohler has secured Jim McMillen to meet Oki Shikina and Dizzy Davis to tangle with Ralph Garibaldi in preliminary matches. The former joust is scheduled for 45 minutes and the latter for a half an hour.

The Friday night affair will mark the Angel's second appearance in Blue Island. The famous Nordic freak whipped Jack Brown in the first show staged at Eagles.

Both the Swede and the Lith are known for their strength and it will be a case of who lasts longer. The Angel is undefeated since coming to Chicago, finding his famous "back breaker" successful on every opponent. Baltran, too, can apply the grip and hopes to put his larger foe's shoulders on the canvas early in the match.

Wily Oki Shikina, fast becoming a favorite at the Blue Island arena, will have his hands full when he tackles Jim McMillen and will have to apply every trick he has stored in his Oriental skull. McMillen is not only powerful, but is up on the deceptions of the game and can dish out a handful of the same tactics.

The Jap is famous for a jui jitsu "sleeper" which renders a foe unconscious. It will be this grip that the brawny Irishman will attempt to evade.

An example of economy in government was contained in the annual report Frank Lyman, Clerk of the Probate Court, made to Judges of the Circuit Court of the business transacted in his office during the fiscal year ending October 31, 1940.

The financial report showed that the Probate Clerk's office had turned over to the county $129,197.08 as a surplus over all expenditures. Total gross earnings of the office amounted to $463,971.10, an increase of $11,066.40 over 1939.

Due partly to the new Probate Court Act which went into effect last January 1, and which made necessary the purchase of $5,027.01 in additional supplies, the surplus was $1,710.88 under the last year's.

Another item on the financial sheet showed that total salaries paid amounted to $170,581.77, or $7,421.50 less than the previous year's total.

Deceased estates docketed were listed at 6,092 or five fewer than in 1939, while 1,630 more claims were recorded, or a total of 13,062. Most other items also showed an increase as indicated in the total volume of business.

In his report Lyman also stated "that in all cases where soldiers and sailors of the world war came into this court, either as an insane case, feeble minded or deceased estate, no charges have been made."

FRANKFORT

Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaugen

Mr. and Mrs. John Buch celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in their home on Wednesday, Nov. 20. The immediate family enjoyed a delicious dinner at 6 o'clock. The table was decorated in gold and white with a large cake as the centerpiece. The cake was beautifully decorated in gold and was made by the daughter Mrs. Wallace Weichbrodt.

After dinner an impressive service in which the wedding vows were exchanged was rendered by Rev. Wirth. The bride and groom were attractively attired and wore the same orange blossoms they wore 50 years ago.

The honored couple received many gifts including flowers, jewelry, money, fancywork and cards.

The following guests were present at the dinner. Mr. and Mrs. George Buch, Everett and Dorothy, Mr. and Mrs. John Buch, Marie and Leroy, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Buch and Vernice, Mrs. Wallace Weichbrodt, Shirley and Sherrel, Rev. and Mrs. Wirth and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. George Minger, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Minger and Mrs. Mary Nagel.

Later in the evening other relatives came in to wish the couple many more years of wedded life. Among them were: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Waldvogel, Mr. and Mrs. David Forsythe, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Tewes, Betty and Marie, Lucille Lühring and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Minger.

On Sunday evening Miss Ruth Ellyn Illgen of Monee was the honored guest at a miscellaneous shower in the home of her aunt Mrs. Emily Holl with Mrs. Fred Bode of Monee and Mrs. Richard Ottler of Andres hostesses. A novel way for the bride to find her gifts was by the ringing of an alarm clock. Every time the clock would ring the bride would have to run and find her gift before the ringing stopped. After all her gifts were found she was allowed to open them. This was followed by playing "crash" buncie with prizes going to Mrs. Lester Holl of Joliet, Myron Holl of Harvey and Theodore Bode of Monee, who in turn presented them to the bride. A delicious lunch was served carried out in the bride's chosen colors of pink and white. Miss Illgen became the bride of Mr. Conrad Bachman of Chicago on Saturday, Nov. 23. She is well known in and around Frankfort as she is a niece of Mrs. William Lankenau.

Mr. Christ Heisner of Gary, Indiana died on Nov. 19 in his home after a very short illness. He had the privilege of having his son Milton of Denver, Colorado with him for a few days preceding his death, because he was on a business trip to this locality and he decided to call on his father because he had not seen him for five years.

Mr. Heisner was born in Germany on June 22, 1871 and came to America with his parents in 1882. He was married to Miss Howard in 1895 who passed away in 1935 in Denver, Colo.

He was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Schultz in 1937.

Mr. Heisner was a blacksmith in partnership with Mr. Henry Eisenbrandt in Frankfort for many years. He later moved to Denver, Colorado and lived there until his wife died. His last years he lived in Gary.

He leaves to mourn his death, his widow, one son Milton of Denver, one granddaughter Yvonne of Denver, one sister Mrs. Katherine Brandau, two brothers Bartel and Adam of Frankfort.

His funeral was held on Friday, November 22, from St. Peter's Evangelical & Reformed Church to Pleasant Hill cemetery with Rev. G. S. Gerhold officiating. This was preceded by a service in his church in Gary, Ind., in the morning.

Thanksgiving season brought home the following students from schools away, Miss Corinne Krusemark, Betty Eisenbrandt, Katherine Priami and Mr. Darrell Haass, all from the University of Illinois. Mr. Warren Heusner from Onago and Annette Kohlhaugen of Normal, Ill. All returned to their school activities again on Monday.

Miss Esther Gerhold of Assumption, Ill., enjoyed Thanksgiving with her parents Rev. and Mrs. G. S. Gerhold.

Novena Crown to Be On Exhibit Dec. 6, 7, 8

Crown of Our Lady of the Andes

The Crown of Our Lady of the Andes, the oldest and largest collection of genuine emeralds in the world, will be exhibited without any charge at the Shrine of the Perpetual Novena in honor of Our Sorrowful Mother at Our Lady of Sorrows Church, Jackson Boulevard and Albany Ave., on December 6, 7 and 8.

Rev. James R. Keane, O. S. M., director of the Perpetual Novena, announced today that plans are being made to accommodate more than 300,000 who will be expected to view this priceless exhibit.

"The Crown is the most famous Novena treasure in all the world," said Father Keane. "It was made in thanksgiving for a favor granted to an entire community and thus merits the attention of all Novenites as an historical exhibit of tremendous importance."

Warren J. Piper, Chicago jeweler and noted international authority on precious stones, who is trustee of an American syndicate which purchased the Crown from the Catholic Church of Popayan, Columbia, South America in 1936, was responsible for the gracious offer by which the people of Chicago and vicinity will be able to view the Crown without any admission charge.

December 8, on which day is celebrated the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, will mark the 341st anniversary of the coronation of the statue of the Blessed Virgin in the Cathedral of Popayan. The impressive scenes with medieval pagentry will be reenacted at Our Lady of Sorrows Church, on Sunday, December 8 at 8 p. m.

In 1590 in Popayan high in the Andes Mountains, the faithful heard of a plague that was sweeping the west coast of South America, ac-ording to Mr. Piper. Delegations of frightened citizens asked the advice of the venerable Bishop who recommended to them that a Novena be made to the Blessed Mother of the Saviour. Following these prayers, Popayan escaped the plague and plans were made for a period of thanksgiving in 1593, in which the famous emerald Crown was started. It took more than six years of labor, because its design was so intricate and its workmanship to delicate in order to make it a crown that would surpass anything ever touched by a human hand.

The Crown contains 453 genuine emeralds with a total combined weight of 1,521 carats. More than 100 pounds of pure gold were used.

The Vatican in an Extraordinary Papal Document No. 71863 on June 17, 1914 gave the approval of His Holiness Pope Pius X to the sale of the Crown so that money could be used in Popayan where it was badly needed to erect an orphan asylum, hospital and home for the aged.

The Crown is now in the vaults of a New York Bank and will soon be brought to Chicago under special guard. It is always guarded by a platoon of at least six private detectives when it is on public exhibition.

While the Crown is on exhibition at the Novena Shrine, it will have a special guard of honor composed of a platoon of 40 cadets and color guard from Marmion Military School at Aurora, Illinois. The cadets will guard the Crown from 7:00 a. m. until midnight each day. They will also participate in a special military Mass on Sunday morning, December 8, at Our Lady of Sorrows Church.

Third District Fed. of Woman's Clubs Meets

Last Tuesday the Gage Park Woman's club was hostess to the Third District of the Illinois Federation of Women's clubs in the Gage Park Field House at 55th and Western avenue. It was an all-day meeting with over 300 women attending.

A new idea was injected for the first time into the District meeting, that of having a Round Table conference for all departments for the first hour. It proved to be a successful idea and each chairman in that way gained valuable information, which enables her to be a more efficient worker in her capacity.

At 11:15 the regular session was opened with Mrs. Thomas Gifford, District President presiding.

The report of the Milwaukee Council meeting last Spring was interestingly presented by six different women with Mrs. Frank Baldwin, president of the Tinley Park club being the announcer.

Mrs. Morrison, field worker for Park Ridge School for Girls presented three small members of that home and they very intelligently portrayed in playlet form their life in that home. They also sang.

The dinner at noon was handled by the hostess club women in a most efficient manner, quickly and it was good to eat.

The first number on the afternoon program was given by three young men of the Lindbloom High School R. O. T. C. who presented the colors and the pledge of allegiance to the Flag and led in the singing of "God Bless America" and the thought came to our minds, what a pity to send such fine young men into a useless slaughter.

It is so necessary that the people of the world begin to study how to prepare for peace.

Prof. Paul Douglas, professor of Economics at the University of Chicago and who is also an Alderman in Chicago, was most interesting.

He gave four ways of financing politics: 1. Accepting a gift from the rich; 2. from the underworld; 3. from the upperworld; 4. assessing job holders, which he figured as ideal—each worker contributing.

Prof. Douglas spoke of the often-heard phrase: "crooked politician" and said the people have a responsibility of making it easy for the politician to go straight. He especially opposed the practice of some churches etc. inviting candidates to their supper etc. where they could speak of their candidacy for a given sum.

Jean Caul of a Blue Island High School read her winning essay on "Why Should We Retain Our Democracy" and received a great applause.

Rev. Kenneth Kildebrand, pastor of Chicago Lawn Presbyterian Church was a forceful speaker; his topic being: "America — Peace or War". He said this country should stay out of war, because of what it is. Communistic Russia and Democratic United States will have a great responsibility — if we stay out of this war—in assisting with the recovery and adjustment for the other countries when the war is over.

THE COMMUNITY SUPPER
(See Recipes Below)

So you're to manage the next community supper? And you're panicky about it! Of course it's a job to feed 200 people appetizingly and leave $25 profit in the treasury. But it can be done! If you must eye the nickels when serving church or club suppers, study the following eight-point program for "feeding the multitude":

(1) Pick a general chairman who can picture the job as a whole. (2) Appoint a responsible person in charge of each food. (3) Arrange the kitchen conveniently for the different jobs. (4) Prepare as many foods ahead of time as possible. (5) Have utensils ready and garnishes at hand. (6) Name a hostess to direct waitresses. (7) Plan a uniform method of serving. (8) Plan menus well ahead of time.

If the meat dish is different, the whole meal seems to have variety. And there's many a trick for serving thrifty cuts differently.

Take meat loaf, for instance. A ham loaf de luxe with a good mustard-horseshoe sauce will "make" any meal. Beef stew can be thickened a little, ladeled into dripping pans, covered with rounds or squares or diamonds of biscuit, and when baked it appears crustily and temptingly yours. If you wish to make it more "de luxe" bake and serve in individual casseroles.

For something different, plan for meat balls with rice. You can serve buttered turnips, and a salad made of cabbage, celery, green peas and pimiento which certainly sells the men this menu.

Now if pennies needn't be watched so closely and you want to do a fall or winter dinner up brown, here's a "ringer": Baked ham, raisin and cider sauce, raw vegetable salad, cranberry muffins, pumpkin pie, coffee, or milk.

Ham Loaf de Luxe.

(Serves 50)

5 pounds smoked ham (ground)
3 pounds veal (ground)
¾ cup green pepper (minced)
¾ cup onion (chopped)
2 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper
8 eggs (beaten)
1 quart tomato soup (canned)
1 quart bread crumbs or uncooked cereal

Combine the meat, green pepper, onion and seasonings. Add beaten eggs, tomato soup, and bread crumbs or uncooked cereal. Pack into bread loaf pans and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1½ hours.

Beef Stew With Biscuits.

(Serves 50)

9 pounds beef round (cut into 1-inch cubes)
2 cups flour
1 cup hot beef drippings
3 quarts boiling water
½ teaspoon peppercorns
2 bay leaves
1 quart turnips (diced)
1 quart carrots (diced)
1 cup onions (sliced)
Salt and pepper to taste

Cut beef into 1-inch cubes. Dredge in the flour and brown in hot beef drippings. Place in kettle and add boiling water. Cook slowly for 2 to 3 hours. Add peppercorns and bay leaves. Add carrots and turnips 1 hour before serving. Add salt and pepper. If necessary, thicken with flour paste. Serve hot with baking powder biscuits on top.

Meat Balls With Rice.

(Serves 40 to 45)

4 pounds beef (ground)
3 pounds pork (ground)
2 onions (minced)
2 cups rice (uncooked)
2 cups cracker crumbs
4 eggs (beaten)
4 tablespoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
2 cups milk

Combine ingredients and mix well. Form into balls. Place in shallow roasting pans. Pour over 2 quarts tomato sauce or tomato soup. Cover pans. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1½ to 2 hours.

UNITY

"The election certainly proved that a lot of people admired Willie," he said.

"Now wait. It's all over and all we want now is unity. Right?" I said.

"Right. I suppose we should forget the violation of a tradition," he said.

"Lissen," I said. "Nothing matters now except that we all be unified. No more arguments, no more dissensions. Right?"

"Right. The election's all over. But I still think the budget question important," he said.

"There you go being partisan," I said.

"I ain't partisan," he said.

"Yes, you are. All that matters is that democracy worked and we are all brothers. Right?" I said.

"Right. In the popular vote Willie was only a few million behind," he said.

"Nuts," I said. "If Roosevelt won by only two votes it would be final under our system and no sense beefing."

"Not at all. The popular vote showed an enormous switch against the New Deal policies," he said.

"Aw, go away! You just don't want unity," I said.

"Of course I want unity. It's the paramount need. But can't we still have it and talk reasonably?" he said.

"You're just another non-unity guy," I said. "You're too partisan. You're petty. You can't be big."

"Who can't be big?" he said.

"You can't. You're a worm, that's what you are. You ain't got no vision. You make me sick. All I'm asking is a little brotherhood and mutual respect, and you just stand there beefing," I said.

"For two cents I'd poke you one," he said.

"You and who else? You better go some place and learn to be tolerant, ya big dummy," I said.

"I am as tolerant as any man in this country, you big fakir," he said, taking a swing at me.

"Everybody in America is anxious for unity but you, you fathead," I said, socking him one on the chin.

"You just don't understand the spirit of democracy. You don't know what unity means, you poor sap," he said, sending a left to my ear.

A policeman came running up and separated us.

"What's the trouble?" the cop asked.

"Unity," I said.

The cop looked at us with disgust and impatience and walked away.

"Hell!" he said. "Everywhere I go I run into fights over THAT!"

THE LIGHTER VEIN AT TRAINING CAMPS

We're camping tonight on the old campground.

Camping tonight, my lady.
Tenting tonight, tenting tonight,
Tenting on the old campground;
There'll be fancy balls tonight,
Bridge and movies lily-white—
Tenting on the old campground.

We are camping tonight on the old campground.
Hostesses here to cheer us;
Tenting tonight, tenting tonight,
We're tenting on the old campground;

Cheerful seem our training tests,
For our folks are week-end guests—
Tenting on the old campground.

—Old Song Revised.

The draft army is to have no catch-as-catch-can entertainment this time. Recreation, diversion and good, clean fun are announced as a definite part of the army training plan, with hundreds of hostesses and junior hostesses bustling about the camps to see about getting up a dance, a bingo party, a bridge carnival or what have you.

The calls of "Squads right!" and "Tention!" will be mingled with "May I have this dance?" and "Aw, let's play some more!"

Uncle Sam's policy this time will be based on the theory that an army camp should in no way resemble a concentration camp, and that the more amusement the boys have the better.

The hostesses may be no younger than 30 and no older than 50, but their junior assistants may get under the wire as young as 25, which assures a reasonable amount of glamour and oomph.

Starvation Diet

By ELEANOR HART

(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

SALLY turned the contents of the housekeeping purse out into her blue and white checked gingham lap. Three dollars and ninety-one cents lay under her gaze, in bills and coins. That was food money for the week. It must last until Bill went to the bank on Saturday morning, as was his custom now while he was out of work, and withdrew just enough to pay their way through another week. And this was Monday morning.

Three dollars and ninety-one cents was enough for their food. Sally was a good cook, a good manager. She and Bill were young, with healthy appetites. They really lived very well, and had to take long, beautiful walks—Sally couldn't help being glad she and Bill were having this time together with Bill at home so much—to keep from gaining weight on what they called their starvation diet.

So, with Sunday out of the way, three dollars and ninety-one cents was quite enough for them for the rest of the week. Sally sat down to plot out meals for the next six days.

"Let's see," she said to herself.

"We could have spaghetti with chopped meat and tomato and onion sauce for dinner. And browned parsnips. And lettuce with french dressing. And stewed strawberries and crackers and cheese. Coffee. Strawberries—three quarts for twenty-nine cents. We'll have them fresh in their hulls for breakfast and I'll stew and jam the rest. Let's see what else's a bargain." And she ran her finger and eye down the advertising column of her grocery store in the morning paper. Both eye and finger stopped suddenly, just before they came again to the strawberry ad. Her eye had wandered to the date line at the top of the paper. It was Bill's birthday date. They had agreed not to celebrate, with gifts or other outward semblance, any anniversary this year. But really—it was a shame not to have a birthday dinner.

Her eye and finger switched across the pages to the butcher's advertisement. "Broilers," it read. "Splendid Bargain, 27 cents a pound."

And back to the grocer's ad: Asparagus, twenty cents. Green peas, two pounds for a quarter. New potatoes. Russian caviar. Olives stuffed with baby onions and cloves.

"Well, why not? Why not spend it all, and charge some more, for one good dinner? A birthday dinner for Bill!—I'll do it!"

Sally ran to the telephone, scattering her horde of money as she went. "I'll keep it for the meat and odds and ends," she thought. "But I'll telephone for the groceries and vegetables and charge them."

So Sally telephoned. She was one of Stratforth's old charge customers and her charge order was welcomed by the clerk.

"Phillips must have a job again," he said to another clerk. "Mrs. Phillips is ordering again."

Then Sally set about planning the best dinner she had ever served. She'd pick flowers before it got hot, and make the house look its prettiest, and then go for the turkey.

She filled vases with iris and roses, her choice early blooms, she got out her very best Italian linen table cloth, and pressed the wrinkles out that long standing had printed in it. She and Bill entertained friends now and again at dinner, but spaghetti and stewed fruit does not call for the more formal table furnishing demanded by caviar and turkey.

Then the telephone rang. Sally pulled out the plug of the flatiron, and answered it. It was Bill.

"Sally," he said, excitement in his voice. "I think I've landed something—something good, really. I don't know for sure, though."

And after she had listened enthusiastically to him, and made a few encouraging remarks, Sally said: "Home to dinner, Bill?"

"Of course. And Sally, maybe it'll be our last starvation dinner. Not that they aren't good. They're swell. But won't we celebrate? Sally, I want to take you out for our first fast-breaker. We'll go to the best place we can think of and bust the bank. Have that spaghetti stuff tonight, will you—with the meat chopped up so little you can't see it without a magnifying glass? For my birthday dinner? I've got a sort of superstition about it. Unless you've ordered—"

"Oh, no," Sally lied bravely. "Sure we'll have it. I haven't ordered yet. Good luck, Bill."

Sally hung up. In a minute or two she took off the receiver again and gave the grocer's number. She canceled her order. "But I've a substitute," she said. "One package of spaghetti and a pound of white onions, a loaf of yesterday's bread, and three quarts of those strawberries you're advertising."

Later in the day she walked to the butcher's for a half-pound of chopped beef. And at six, on a table spread with a drawn-work Italian linen tablecloth, with a silver bowl of tea roses in the center, she was ready to serve the substitute dinner.

Then she sat down on the front porch—a great jar of iris making a lovely splash of color in front of her white linen frock, from the street, though she hadn't thought of that;

and looking up at the sound of approaching voices she saw Bill and an older man swinging up the flagged walk.

In the next five minutes Sally went through so many sensations that she stopped trying to sort them out. The man, it appeared, was Mr. Robert Clothier Clark, the great Mr. Clark. When he was introduced to Sally by a slightly flustered Bill he explained that, commuting on the same road that Bill used, to a station farther on, he had accepted Bill's invitation to stop for dinner. His own family was away, and a telephone message to the house would set things right. Might he use the telephone? And while he telephoned Bill explained, as best he could, to Sally. He'd landed a job—almost sure—with Clark, the publisher. Still talking on the train when they reached Bill's station. So, what could he do?

"Of course," said Sally. "But, oh Bill, why didn't I get that turkey?"

"Turkey?" Bill looked shocked. "Turkey—we'll have that when we celebrate. What we've got's sure to be good enough for anybody."

So they sat down, the three of them, to the simple, inexpensive meal served by Sally herself, on her best Italian cloth. And if Sally went through agonies of mortification because of the meal's simplicity, nobody else seemed to mind.

Later they talked, of this and that, in Sally's pleasant living room. And then Bill drove off to the station with Mr. Clark.

"Landed!" he burst out, as he dashed into the kitchen when he came back, to find Sally putting away the last bit of china. "And you did it—you and your starvation dinner. It seems Clark's on a diet—no rich food. No soups or pastries and very little meat. And he's going to ask you if you'd tell his wife how to serve such a dinner. Says he hasn't enjoyed anything so much for five years. He wonders if their cook could learn to make that spaghetti stuff, and the job's mine."

Bill seized Sally round the waist, danced into the living room with her, held her in one arm while he turned the radio on to some music, and then, kicking the rugs back, danced with her, in silence, until they were both tired.

"Why, Sally," he said, as he looked down on her when they stopped. "You're crying?"

"Am I?" laughed Sally. "But I'm just happy, Bill."

PLATONIC

(Associated Newspapers.)
WNU Service.

"AND what are you hoping dear little Donald will be when he grows up?" asked the garrulous Mrs. Simpkins.

"That is what troubles me," sighed little Mrs. Warrenner, almost as plump, quite as black-eyed and fully as healthy as the baby sleeping at her side. "I should like him to be an engineer—civil engineer—but I once heard of an engineer who fell off an embankment. Then, he might be a doctor, only I'm so afraid getting up at all times of the night and being interrupted at meals might interfere with his digestion. Of course it is good to be a minister. She sighed and put a fond hand over the sleeping baby, pulling up his tiny covers tenderly.

Mrs. Simpkins shook her head. "I know just how you feel," she said. Mary Warrenner sighed again.

"His head is very like Mr. Mason, the lawyer. I'd like him to be a lawyer. I'd like him to be a lawyer right well, but I heard of a lawyer who was shot at by his client."

"What about a good business, like a grocer, or something like that?" suggested the visitor lighting the lamp under the tea-kettle. It was midafternoon and the tea-wagon stood by Mrs. Warrenner's bed.

"He hasn't got a face like any grocer merchant I've ever seen. He's more like the bust of Plato at the high school than anything I ever saw. And he was a great philosopher."

The platonic nerves being somewhat soothed, the downstairs door was heard to close gently.

"Isn't Tom a lamb? He never forgets baby might be asleep. I wish he could think of some way—some perfectly safe way—by which the darling could earn his living when he grows up."

"What's that? What on earth are you talking of, Mary?" asked the merry-eyed husband entering the room and kissing his wife and baby.

"Baby's future," sighed his wife, taking a pensive bit out of a plum jam sandwich made by Mrs. Simpkins.

"Good Lord! At it again!" and her husband shook with kindly merriment. "Let's see. How old is the youngster now?"

"Now you're teasing me, Tom. You know perfectly well he's two weeks old Saturday. It isn't too early to begin to plan."

"Let's see. Why don't you try the old game, tinker, tailor, soldier, sailor—"

"Stop!" cried the little mother, "you shall not, even in fun, say that darling might be a thief."

At that moment the predatory fingers of his first-born gripped fast a falling plum from the sandwich.

"That decides it. Thief or junk-dealer," shouted his delighted father.

"I think you're quite horrid," pouted Mary. "It just shows he is extraordinarily intelligent. Just like Plato."

Set of Shelves From Spools and Can Lids

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THE other day I went to a Hobby Show and there, hanging on the wall with a blue ribbon pinned on it, were the spool shelves from SEWING Book 3! Of course, I searched out the proud girl who had made them, and she told me that she had also made the end table of spools that is in Book 5. Her urgent need at the moment was, "something to make for Mother for Christmas."

Here is my suggestion. An adorable set of three corner shelves made of a lid from a tin candy box, one from a cracker can and a coffee can put together with wire, spools and two beads. These shelves were painted cherry red and hung up with a brass hook to hold salt and pepper shakers, vinegar cruet, and other things for making salads. Any homemaker will think of a dozen places where this handy set of shelves could be used. All the directions are here in this sketch.

There is time to make the hanging book shelves in Book 3, or the end table in Book 5, before Christmas, if you mail your order for these booklets today. Send order to:
